Our hope was to have plans finalized, with your approval permits in time to begin building no later than September three offices new locations open in January and start major work availability and the budget that we've discussed. December should be possible. We should then be able to start work in late August-February for the second group for the last group to open in May.

For quick reference, here's a rough budget estimate for

	Q1 2010	Q2 2010	Q4 2
Design	25,000	5,000	5,000
Consulting	15,000	10,000	5,000
Construction		85,000	400,000

Dear Scott,

As promised, I just wanted to provide you with an overview of our status with your business location to be open in 2011. We would like to have building plans for your approval by month's end. So, if you are able to come over to conduct that at least in a quick meeting would be the remainder of the project.

For quick reference, here's a rough budget estimate for the remainder of the project.

	Q1 2010	Q2 2010	Q4 2010	Q1 2011	Q2 2011

Outsourcing

What is outsourcing?

Outsourcing is the result of globalization, where organization's borders and country borders disappear. Ghodeswar and Vaidyanathan (2008) defined outsourcing as a decision of making or buying a service or product that was developed with in the organization to be done by another organization, which was based on (Monezka et al. 2005). Another view of the definition of out sourcing was that it is when an organization contracts out to another company for the hope of achieving a more cost effective and efficient outcome that can not be achieved with in the organization (Knight and Jones, 2007). Soliman (2003) defined outsourcing on a global level as a contract from one company to a service provider for a task with the company wishes to be preformed.

Reasons for outsourcing

There are many different reasons for outsourcing. Soliman (2003) believed in four main reasons for out sourcing based on his research of previews studies. First as a strategic decision, outsourcing allows organizations to focus on core competencies rather then other field that take up more time and are less important for competition (Quinn and Hilmer, 1994). Second, one of the most common of reasons was to reduce the cost with in the organization (Alpar and Saharia, 1995, McFarlan and Nolan, 1995) Another reason was the lack e abilities (Grover et al., 1994) i competitions pressure (Lacity et 1994), problems with in the poli with in the organization (L and Hirschheim, 1993), pro within organizations envirc such as the economy (Smi 1998). The last was limited to the information system of an organization, or internet to make decisions in production cost advantage, application service wise, maturity of technology, application service and Soliman, 2002). Gho performance

Global contracts are formed through outsourcing to achieve advantages in cost, services, marketing, and many other things.

Foreword

By Eugene
Executive VP, Product Marketing

In the previous issue of Foreword, we defined the emerging market of virtual intellectual property (IP) business and its growth drivers in order to leverage the opportunity versus business models that exist between the high-stakes, investment-oriented, and end users the challenges of protecting IP become an important part of defining such business models. We asked George Ritz to continue on the topic aspect of IP business. George is a partner in the San Francisco-based IPPlanning & Plans, law firm, who specializes in intellectual property to encompassing patent, copyright, and trade secret law. He has been extensively involved in recent and upcoming business IP cases.

The New Frontier: Intellectual Property Rights

George A. Ritz

In the nineteenth century, the expansion of the American frontier was accompanied by a transformation of American jurisprudence. As settlers moved beyond the Appalachian Mountains, the nation's young legal system struggled to provide enforceable and civil means to resolve high-stakes disputes over land ownership, railroad rights-of-way, mining claims, and water and grazing rights. These were law frontiers for those new conflicts, and old rules and categories couldn't be easily adapted to meet the rapid pace of commercial and industrial development. The uncertainty that resulted was ultimately resolved by new doctrines embodied in both statute and court decisions.

High-technology businesses represent the frontier of U.S. commercial and industrial development. The wealth of these companies depends less on physical assets than on ideas, know-how, and innovations. The emerging form of wealth, commonly known as intellectual property (IP), is the traditional or well-understood. Defining the contours of IP presents as formidable a challenge as any the American legal system has ever faced.

Although the law defines many of the traditional rules governing tangible property to fit the application of intangible assets, it's often hard to determine if these are people who create and refine the ideas, designs, and processes that distinguish one company from its competitors. For that reason, IP law is often before and somewhat murky that their most valuable assets with out the clear every right. Given the enormous value of leading edge technology and the degree of our guidelines, conflict is inevitable.

Understand the legal options

From the beginning, technology companies have faced difficult options in deciding how to best protect their IP. They may rely on agreements with their employees and with their clients to protect their IP from both their agreements, patents, copyrights, and trade secrets, use also or information risk in protecting innovation-related information.

Companies often don't understand the legal nature of each option for protecting IP and determine which best fits their circumstances. Companies frequently resort to signing agreements and other contracts as they attempt to protect themselves in their best advantage. Such arrangements may benefit our competitors, who often do not get into through litigation. Businesses that prefer parties to such arrangements may sign the such agreements, legal, needs competition.

Statutory protection may offer an alternative to negotiated agreements. However, for many, such present offers from making using or selling the patented/invention software algorithms may suit. It's for patent protection if they break new intellectual and engineering ground. The distinction is the one and another required to obtain a patent. Particularly for uncommercialized applications, the grants may not cover what's new, which is longer than new product. Unlike trademark, distribution, pricing, novelty and utility is required, including a disclosure for the best manner of "improving" the claimed invention.

Copyright law also may be used to protect IP. Copyrights work differently a patent giving copyright protection is simpler and faster, requiring only that the originator of an original work be fixed in a tangible medium. In addition, copyright protection remains in force for 70 years after the author's death, or 95 years, whichever is longer.

Despite the ambiguous references to IP in the electronic and software industries, the legal status of code is uncertain and unsettled. Without legal precedents to define the boundaries of rights, efforts to set those assets to customer advantage, when competitors producing their own use to competitors, generate conflicting behaviors.

Copyright law does not protect the copying of a particular expression of an idea. A copyright doesn't confer rights to the idea itself. Copyright law, however, was originally designed to protect hardware, music, and dramatic works, not semiconductor designs or computer programs. Courts and Congress have expressly extended copyright protection to software, but the law doesn't determine the protection level every individual business situation.

Trade secret law primarily protect a broader scope of material than either patents or copyrights. Companies must take a series of deliberate steps to ensure that information is covered by trade secret law. To qualify a company must maintain security measures to protect the information from being disclosed. Additionally, it must cause some economic benefit from the information not being known by others. Therefore, information is those that are in the public domain can't qualify for trade secret protection.

Does IP as a company asset

With more growth than in other for those dealing with it, companies should take protective measures before protection was. It goes into litigation with a solid trade secret policy. Companies should treat IP as an asset, the value and control it with particular security. Such control includes, controlling IP assets, enter to "license" confidential information to third parties, and tracking activities.

Controlled information is leaving the company and if so, where it is going. The trade secret policy should be contained in a written agreement with both employees. Contracts with other companies should directly address IP rights.

The enduring importance of IP protection can be seen throughout the high-technology industries. Many venture capitalists and institutional investors, for example, place a high on their portfolio lists. Given the value of IP assets, programs for protecting these assets are increasingly valuable. For many companies, critical to address IP issues may often this involves difficulties, and then it is a matter of time. ■

WHAT IS SUSHI?

Beginning as a method of preserving fish centuries ago, sushi has evolved into an artful, unique dining experience. In its earliest form, dried fish was placed between two pieces of vinegared rice as a way of making it last. The nori (seaweed) was added later as a way to keep one's fingers from getting sticky.

Technically, the word 'sushi' refers to the rice, but colloquially, the term is used to describe a finger-size piece of raw fish or shellfish on a bed of vinegared rice or simply the consumption of raw fish in the Japanese style (while sushi is not solely a Japanese invention, these days, the Japanese style is considered the de facto serving standard).

SUSHI BOOKS -->

QUICK & EASY SUSHI COOKBOOK
This book has great pictures, however it is not as complete as Sushi Made Easy.

SUSHI FOR PARTIES: MAKI-ZUSHI AND NIGIRI-ZUSHI
This book also has great pictures, with advanced maki (cut roll) making techniques.

SUSHI MADE EASY
A very decent all-around book for the money.

Maki-zushi

The rice and seaweed rolls with fish and/or vegetables. There are also more specific terms for the rolls depending on the style.

Nigiri-zushi

The little fingers of rice topped with wasabi and a fillet of raw or cooked fish or shellfish. Generally the most common form of sushi you will see.

Temaki-zushi

Also called a hand-roll. Cones of sushi rice, fish and vegetables wrapped in seaweed. It is very similar to maki.

Sashimi

Sashimi is raw fish served sliced, but as-is. That means no rice bed or roll, but it is often served alongside daikon and/or shiso. This is my favorite style as you really get the flavor of the fish.

HEX to RGB Color Converter

In creating your website it can be very useful to know the hexadecimal values of RGB colors and vice versa. For instance if you need to match a graphics color to your background value all you'd need to do is find out the RGB value of the graphic in your graphics program and convert it to HEX. On the other hand if you already have a web page designed and you'd like to make a header graphic for your site you could take the HEX background color and convert it to RGB for use in your graphics program.

A Road Less Travelled

We use the entire chocolate palette, from the darkest of darks to the creamiest of milk chocolates to wrap the centers of our hand-rolled, dipped and decorated truffles.

The screenshot shows the website's search interface. A blue arrow labeled "License" points to the "License" dropdown menu in the search filters. Another blue arrow labeled "Attribution.. Public Domain" points to the "Attribution" checkbox. A third blue arrow labeled "Advanced Search" points to the "Advanced Search" button in the top right corner of the search area. The main content area features a grid of search results, with a prominent image of blue and white Christmas lights. Below the image is a "welcome to everystockphoto.com" message and a "Sign Up" button. The footer includes a "current collection" section with a "click to edit collection name" link.

FreeFoto.com is made up of 132413 images with 182 sections organized into 3636 categories.

FreeFoto.com is the largest collection of free photographs on the Internet (link back and attribution required). See FREE USE RULES.

The comprehensive, yet easy to navigate site, offers images that are free for on-line use, with higher quality versions available for sale.

Also non-commercial users may download our web size images to use off-line in school projects, church services, cards, leaflets, etc. Basically if your off-line use is not commercial you can download our web size images for free.

FreeFoto.com features exclusive images found nowhere else on the web with new pictures being added every week.

Prices start from just $30US for the A7 72dpi versions with A5, A4 and A3 high res 300 dpi versions also available.

Please don't use software to download the site!!! This just crashes our servers and stops other people from enjoying it.
